Contents

David Brooks published relatively little during his lifetime, and his collection includes a number of conference papers, and draft book chapters describing Bakhtiari life, and related subjects such as Islam, religion, pilgrimage, political leadership, women and dance. There is copious raw material from his fieldwork in the form of field notes, and also lecture notes and drafts for papers, and also a quantity of photographic, film and audio tape/cassette material. There are also files of archival research notes, especially from the National Archives in Kew and the India Office, index cards, some administrative papers from his time at Durham University, including grant applications, and quantities of newspaper cuttings on post-revolutionary Iran, and offprints, magazines, pamphlets and some books on Iran.

Biography

David H.M. Brooks was born on 27 June 1940, the second son of Alexander Brooks of Carlisle, Lanarkshire, where the family had owned a High St store for 6 generations. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1962 with a BA in Psychology and went on to Balliol College, Oxford where he was awarded a Diploma in Social Anthropology in 1963. The next four years were interspersed with research trips to Iran and efforts to make contact with the Bakhtiari nomads in the south-west of the country, whose Spring migrations he accompanied in 1964 and 1966. He was accompanied by his wife, Marianne, a nurse who established a medical clinic in the region and worked in a Tehran hospital during their visits. Whilst in Iran he almost died from cholera and was later almost killed when, in 1966, a car ploughed into the one in which he was sitting. As a result of the latter, he lost his spleen, part of a lung and severely damaged his diaphragm which compromised his health for years to come.

He was appointed lecturer in the Anthropology of the Middle East at Durham's newly formed Anthropology Department in 1968. David taught at Durham for over two decades, during which time he established himself as an inspirational and invigorating teacher and, in the words of one colleague at the time, 'a true intellectual'. He was well known for spending evenings and sometimes the entire night before a lecture, preparing new and deeply thought-provoking material delivered with an engaging mix of authority and humour, and mostly from memory. Judith Okely, a colleague in the 1970s described how some students would go down to the banks of the River Wear just to sit, with their heads spinning after his lectures. His appeal was puzzling to some and it was suggested that on occasion, colleagues would try and listen outside his seminars in order to understand his draw.

His academic interests covered the Middle East, particularly Iran, and also Afghanistan, and Morocco, nomadic and tribal populations, Sufism, Shi'a Islam, tribal organisation in Iran with special reference to the history of tribe-state relationships and problems of settlement, religious and cultural symbolism, ritual and the performing arts - music, dance, poetry - in Iran, cognitive and cultural anthropology, structuralism, semiology and hermeneutics. He was also an adviser and script writer for the Oscar nominated film People of the Wind.

In 1986 David was diagnosed with lung cancer and had to have one of his lungs removed. Unfortunately, it was his good lung that was removed and he was left with the lung that had already been badly damaged in the earlier car crash. He had also been a heavy smoker for many years. He was a man of remarkable spirit and tenacity. David was reliant on a ventilator for the last few years of his life, but always ensured he had plenty of oxygen available when friends came round to talk.

David Brooks died on 29 April 1994 at the age of 53, a few years after his wife Marianne passed away. He left behind two sons, Ruaridh and Robb.

BRO 1/38 1967 - 1983

Brooks conference papers, scripts of talks and articles:

"The Political Leadership of the Bakhtiari, a migratory tribe in S.W. Iran", British Academy lecture November 1967 delivered by Brooks to The British Institute of Persian Studies, annotated, accessible online, with an invite to the lecture. The lecture outlines the environment of the Bakhtiari, the process of their feud resolution and their political structure.

The Ascent of Man BBC TV programme, notes on gypsies and nomadism, 1970. Notes on nomadism includes a diagram of the divisions within the Bakhtiari, political divisions and migration. Notes on gypsies covers agricultural and grazing land, livestock and cultivation. The 1973 documentary series was written and presented by Jacob Bronowski and follows the development of human societies. Brooks wrote a series of notes to assist on the development of the programme.

"Bakhtiari" in Family of Man Peoples of the world, how and where they live Part 8 (Marshall Cavendish Encyclopedia, 1974), article on the Bakhtiari p.212-216 (unattributed, but colour illustrated) (also includes an article on the Baggara of Sudan, p.202-206), with various drafts, and correspondence with the publishers Tom Stacey Ltd, accessible online

"Bakhtiari Political Structure" paper, accessible online. Lecture handout of the Bakhtiari, outlining their economy, administration, settlements, a brief history, terms for the Iranian tribes and political structure.

"Dance and the expression of Bakhtiari identity", Festival of Popular Traditions in Isfahan paper October 1977, preliminary draft, accessible online. The paper deals with the problems of understanding and interpreting dance forms among the Bakhtiari. Brooks interprets dancing as a social event and encourages the Bakhtiari dancer to become aware of how to live in his world and express individuality.

"Virgins, Viragos and Lion Women Among the Bakhtiari of S.W. Iran: Ambi-valent Images of the Female" (three versions), presented at the 11th World Conference of Anthropologists in New Delhi, November 1978, accessible online. Preliminary notes covering the role of Bakhtiari women and how female identity is imaged and experienced. Brooks discusses the dichotomy surrounding gender and relates this to how both men and women are portrayed in the poem 'Abdo Mahmud Lalari.' There is also a section with diagrams explaining Bakhtiari costume and female headdresses.

"Sacred Space and Sacred Place: pilgrimage in the Bakhtiari of Iran", Pilgrimage: the Human Quest Pittsburgh conference paper delivered on the 17th May 1981. The paper describes the annual pilgrimages the Bakhtiari undertake between their summer and winter pastures. The challenges of their journeys and how they relate to their environment are also discussed. Brooks also outlines the importance of significant sites within the Bakhtiari territory.

"The Enemy Within: Limitations on Leadership in the Bakhtiari" The book describes the troubled economic and political interactions between Iranian tribal groups and the state, offprint of chapter 12 in R. Tapper. The Conflict of Tribe and State in Iran and Afghanistan (1983), p.337-362, accessible online. The chapter discusses the nomads, tribes and the State, the nomadic responses to state policies, structural resilience and the Bakhtiari's experience of the state administrative structure. Brooks describes the continuous conflict between the Bakhtiari khans, the effect of British presence in the region and other tribal relations.

Offprint: G.R. Garthwaite, "Two Persian Wills of Hajj Ali Quli Khan Sardar As'ad", Journal of the American Oriental Society (Vol.95 No.4, October-December 1975), p.645-650.

The article discusses that from the examination of these two Persian wills it reveals a deviation from what might be regarded as an Islamic norm - sons share the father's estate equally. The wills also demonstrate the persistence of wealth and power within particular families over generations, and also show the adaptability of Islam and its institutions.

Offprint: Dieter Ehmann, "Verkehrsentwicklung und Kulturlandschaftswandel in Bakhtiari (Mittlerer Zagros)", Sociologus (New Series, Vol.24, No.2, 1974), p.137-147, with enlarged copies of 5 plans (in German). Synopsis: historical reconstruction shows that traffic facilities for communication and trade were well developed in Sasanid times up to the 14th Century. This coexisted with agriculture and forests in the nowadays bare valleys. Political instability of Persia and military events from the Afghan invasion favoured the Bakhtiari tribe's nomadic way of life and decay of the traffic routes and agriculture. "History of the Bakhtiari rough copy" with annotated corrections and "Book II" typescript, 63f + 38f

Typescript notes: Mowri Taifeh 1967; Taifeh Muori 1972 (in German); From Richard W. Cottam, Nationalisation in Iran, Chapter 4: Nationalism and the Tribes (Pittsburgh 1964); Browne, The Persian Revolution of 1905-1909, page numbers and notes on certain events (Cambridge 1910)

Manuscript notes, including on Early Adventures and The Bakhtiari.

Newspaper cutting from The Los Angeles Times Ex-Navy scientist details war training for dolphins (11th April 1976).

1. Probably recorded by Brooks containing Bakhtiari music and some local songs.
2. Professional Iranian music (traditional music).
3. Seems non-professional (very poor quality), containing Bakhtiari music and some classical western music
4. The content of this cassette seems to be a combination of Iranian traditional music and Lori (Bakhtiari) music. However, it is professional music.
5. Seems recorded by David.
6. This cassette is a messy combination of professional and non-professional music. Some parts of the cassettes look professional and others not. There are a number of men and women singers in it. There is a Turkish song too.
7. Professional music. I am not sure if some songs are Lori at all.
8. Seems recorded by David

8 cassette tapes, in plastic boxes except for one

Mecca, photographed by Mohamed Amin (August 1978).

Susan Wright's notes:

Comparison of contents of reels with David Brook's 'Bakhtiari Music and dance' located in the archive in Box 5, 'Symbolism' file It seems that his text 'Bakhtiari music and dance' was written as notes to go with a compilation tape, maybe to accompany a lecture, probably with his own performance of the dances. This compilation tape has not been identified. David summarises the types of recordings he has made and refers to the number of minutes on the tape. He then describes the types of music, the instruments, and the different dances. The text ends with handwritten notes about the movements involved in one of the dances (probably dasmal bazi). In the list below I have used the categories David uses in that text and have tried to find where they feature on the index of recordings. More work needs to be done by listening to the recordings and identifying the contents in more detail.

'Virgins and Viragos' papers and women

'Virgins, Viragos and Lion Women among the Bakhtiari of S. W. Iran: Ambi-valent images of the female' by David Brooks. Paper presented at the 10th World Congress of the Anthropologists, New Delhi, (December 1978). The preliminary notes not for publication or citation, several drafts. The paper discusses the way women are viewed within Bakhtiari culture, with reference to the category of Shirzan or lion-women.

Loose sheets: notes on the invisible virgin to the visible virago, human identity and social construction of the self, poetic images of the female among the Bakhtiari, the interpretation of Tarikh description of Shirzon incident, description of Venus statuettes and what she signifies to society.

Women in Revolutionary Iran: notes on Zainab as a model for women, Fatema as the most complete female model, bibliography of books containing women in society, images of Arab women, women and Shi'ism in Iran

Draft of 'Women of the Harem...Women Voters' by Michael M.J. Fischer, (June 1975). The paper discusses Harem women's marriage and transformation from oriental peasantry to industrial individualism, marriage patterns in Yazd, fragility of marriage and freedom of choice, community religion, veiling and sexual spheres.

'Virgins and Viragos' drafts and notes

'Speech, Silence and Women's Status in Iran' by Anny Tual. The paper investigates the cultural modalities involving the conditions of use of speech and silence for women in Iran. The restriction and absence of speech intervene in the women's lives and so Tual analyses the traits of the language the women use to express themselves.

Notes on the paper: the framework, methodological problems, notes on the lion women of the Bakhtiari.
