Contents

Personal correspondence between Rev Robert Tate and the Rev Thomas Slater, with some letters to James Chadwick. The letters cover a wide range of subjects but are particularly valuable for their insight into the development of local Catholic missions in Yorkshire from the 1830s to the 1870s, including the foundation of missions and churches, the role of local Catholic gentry families of Yorkshire and South Durham (specifically the Stourtons, Maxwells and Vavasours), and the attitude of the Protestant community towards Catholics following the restoration of the hierarchy. As Tate was heavily involved in Catholic ecclesiastical administration, the letters also provide a wealth of information on all aspects of the running of the Catholic Church and its often stormy internal disputes, particularly those involving Bishop John Briggs, which characterised mid-nineteenth century Catholicism. The letters also detail Tate's role in the administration of Ushaw College as vice-president and, later, president. Throughout the correspondence, Tate offers frank and forthright opinions on the changing nature of Catholicism in England, in particular contrasting his own Gallican views with the development of ultramontanism and its influence on devotional practices and clerical attitudes, and how these changes influenced the wider political situation.

About the creator

Robert Tate was born in York in 1799 and educated at Ushaw College. He was ordained in 1822 and initially chose to remain at Ushaw in a teaching capacity (Philosophy). He was made a prefect of studies in 1824 and, following the death four years later of the president John Gillow, Tate was promoted to vice-president. After a spell as a missionary in Hazelwood, Yorkshire, Tate returned to Ushaw to teach dogmatic theology in 1839 at the request of the new president, Charles Newsham. He clearly excelled in this role and, in 1845, was honoured by the pope who made him a doctor of divinity. Much to his relief, Tate narrowly missed out on an episcopal appointment to replace Bishop Riddell of the Northern District, who died in 1847; he was greatly pleased with the eventual appointment of William Hogarth. In 1849, he resigned his vice-presidency and returned to work as a missionary at Hazelwood. Throughout this period, Tate remained on cordial terms with Hogarth, so much so that the latter ignored his episcopal colleagues and unilaterally appointed Tate to the presidency of Ushaw in 1863. In stark contrast to his predecessor, his presidency was characterised by moderation, with only minor embellishments made to the Ushaw buildings. Robert Tate died as president of the college in 1876.

Arrangement

The letters and other papers follow the original arrangement of the collection which is broadly chronological. The exception to this arrangement is a handful of letters added to the end of the numbering sequence at a later date.

Bibliography

The Rev. Michael Sharratt has drawn extensively on the Tate-Slater correspondence in his examination of Tate's Gallican views:

M. Sharratt, "The old school or purple socks? Robert Tate (1799-1876) on a changing church", in W.J. Campbell (ed.), Ushaw College 1808-2008: a celebration (Ushaw, Durham: St. Cuthbert's Society, 2008), p.36-52.

UC/P8/1 19 March 1835

Tate to Slater: rumours that he may not return to Ushaw and hopes of remaining a country curate, his antipathy towards Newsham who has made disparaging remarks about his mission in Hazelwood, agreeing with Slater on the need for bishops to be present at the Vicar-Apostolic meetings relating to the accounts of the charitable fund for infirm members, the lack of danger of undue episcopal control over the fund, the future opening of the chapel at Layburn, his opinion that the Irish Church revenues question will be resolved.

2f

UC/P8/2 25 October 1835

Tate to Slater: a resolution passed at a meeting in Newcastle seeking an increase in bishops, his hopes that the clergy will agitate for the restoration of the hierarchy in spite of Rome's reluctance, Lingard's new edition of the Bible, Dr Youens's depression.

2f

UC/P8/3 4 February 1837

Tate to Slater: a bishop and clergy meeting, his opinion on the proposed division of the Northern District and the need to avoid giving regular bishops the vote in the election of bishops, differences between King William IV, Lord Melbourne and Daniel O'Connell over the Irish question, scandals involving Dr Baines's clergy in the south, his hope that he will become a bishop, Slater's visit to Ushaw.

4f

UC/P8/4 30 April 1837

Tate to Slater: a rumour that Briggs had denounced his clergy in Rome as "radicals" and his application for a coadjutor to smother the movement and the suggestion of Tate to fill this role, a meeting passing resolutions relating to a division of the Northern District and recommending Yorkshire as a bishopric, growing calls for regular clergy to vote in episcopal elections, Briggs's homily on clergy lifestyle, his dinner with Youens to celebrate his departure from Ushaw, Youens's successor, the death of Cardinal Weld, his opinions on politics.

2f

UC/P8/5 18 August 1837

Tate to Slater: anger at the election of Liddle, the future of Lord Melbourne's government and the Irish question, his opinion of Queen Victoria, his belief that Newsham will be a good president and approval of his reforms, his eyewitness account of violence at the Wakefield election.

2f

UC/P8/6 21 November 1837

Tate to Slater: the generosity of the clergy towards donating £600 towards Ushaw, the lack of support from the gentry towards Catholic education, Charles Blundell's will and large bequests to various clergy and religious institutions, opening of a chapel at Allerton, the plan to provide prize essays in Philosophy and Theology.
